

By ERIN McCracken
Daily Record/Sunday News

Unexplained visions
... bumps in the night ... footsteps of the unseen ... objects that move on their own ...

These experiences produce goosebumps and make the hair on the back of the neck stand on end — and they all happened in York County.

"Spooky York, Pennsylvania" co-author Scott D. Butcher, Fran
Keller of Martin Memorial Library in York and members from other area organizations have collected evidence of local
"X-Files." Read if you dare.

• The Penn Park case:

Legend goes that Revolutionary War Gen. "Mad Anthony" Wayne took six prisoners from the old jail at George and King streets in York, marched them over to Penn Park and executed them one at a time by firing squads. People have reported seeing headless men wandering around the park, Keller said.

• The Camp Security case:

In 1782, a fever broke out at the Revolutionary War prison in Windsor Township, killing many prisoners. "Hessian Thal," a poem by Henry L.
Fisher tells how soldiers' ghosts awaken every Christmas Eve, to jeer at their commanding officer.
Learn more at www.campsecurity.com.

• The Accomac Inn case:

John Coyle purchased the Accomac Inn in Hellam Township in 1864. On May 30, 1882, Coyle asked servant Emily Myers for her hand in marriage. When Myers rejected the offer, Coyle shot her dead. He was later found guilty of murder and hanged in Gettysburg. He is buried about 50 feet from the Inn. Butcher has heard accounts of screams from the fireplace, arguments between invisible people in the middle of the night and latch doors opening on their own. Learn more at www.accomacinn.com.

• The UFO case: Butcher said that York had its own reports of extraterrestrial encounters during the UFO hysteria of the 1950s. In July 1952, residents reported seeing a flying saucer moving from North York toward Emigsville and Mount Wolf.
Then, a Shiloh resident came forward saying that he and some friends were playing with spotlights pointed toward the clouds.

• The cannibal case:

In 1872, P.T. Barnum's traveling museum, menagerie and hippodrome came to York. A canvas tent was set up near Penn Park and featured cannibals from Fiji.
One of the cannibals — a dwarf — died at the Pennsylvania House Hotel.
A local newspaper reported that two male cannibals ate the body, but the story was disputed, Butcher said. The cannibal was buried in an unmarked grave at Potter's Field. When the cemetery was excavated in the 1980s, the cannibal's body was missing, Butcher said.

"A local physician reportedly obtained the body to dissect it for research," he said.

• The Hex murder case:

In 1928, Nelson Rehmeyer was murdered in his farmhouse on Rehmeyer's Hollow Road in North Hopewell Township by three young men who believed he cast evil spells on them.

"It was the most notorious witchcraft trial of the 20th century," Butcher said. He added that most people don't make the connection that the trial took place in the old courthouse in downtown York. Learn more at www.hexmurder.com.

• The Goodridge house
case:

The William C. Goodridge House, 123 E. Philadelphia St. in York, was a stop on the Underground Railroad.
Over the years, there have been stories about people hearing children laughing or crying, the sounds of footsteps and windows opening by themselves.

Butcher said that groups involved with renovations "heard chains rattling and moaning" and refused to return to work.

• The Capitol Theatre
case:

Strand-Capitol
Marketing Director Gary Taylor said that there have been reports of cigar odor coming from the Capitol Theatre's projection area.
"The story goes that there used to be a projectionist who smoked cigars year ago," Taylor said.

Other supernatural events have been reported at:

- First Presbyterian Church, 225 E. Market St. in York
- Elmwood Mansion in Spring Garden Township
- York Little Theatre, 27 S. Belmont St. in Spring Garden Township
- The Smyser-Bair House, 30 S. Beaver St. in York
- Ghost hill on Pleasant View Road in Lewisberry